

Business Breakfast with CBI Director General, Richard Lambert

Harvey Nash is delighted to invite you to our business briefing with Richard Lambert on Tuesday 4th September.

As the country's leading business voice since he became Director General of the CBI last year, Richard Lambert is eminently qualified to talk on a range of topics regarding what the future holds for UK businesses.

UK plc has never been in a more competitive global environment, and has never competed so effectively. But how do we retain our competitive edge?

The direction of the new Brown Government will certainly have an impact, as will any possible Cameron Government... Significantly, Lord Leitch's warning to the Government that the UK must become a world leader in skills by 2020 if it wants to sustain its position in the global economy should ensure that "up-skilling" of the UK workforce is near the top of both the Government and Business agenda.

Whatever the topic, a keynote address by Richard Lambert promises to be truly engaging and will come with valuable insights into the new CEO of UK plc – Gordon Brown.

About Richard Lambert

Richard took up the post of Director-General of the CBI in July 2006 after a distinguished career in journalism, business and academia.

Richard's early career was dominated by the Financial Times – holding positions including US Bureau Chief – where he launched the US version of the paper – Financial Editor and Deputy Editor.

After a spell with the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University – where he was asked to write the Lambert Review of Business & University Collaboration – he became a member of the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee from 2003 until 2006 prior to his appointment at the head of the CBI.
